What is this training about? This two day course titled —Strategic Community Policing & Problem Solving” is designed to challenge participants as they apply strategic approaches to community policing and problem solving. Participants will interact within the course materials while exploring and examining strategies in developing their own community policing projects.

This two-day interactive training course consists of two separate but connected training deliveries that will provide participants with the information and structure needed to develop or strengthen collaborative partnerships between the community and police. Training will incorporate the unique considerations facing communities in addressing crime, violence, and safety issues that require specific skills and capabilities in collaboration, including problem identification, information sharing, sharing resources, spreading costs, and helping communities explore community policing collaboration initiatives.

Who should attend? The target audiences for this program are participants representing a broad spectrum of Federal, State, and local law enforcement jurisdictions, including the following established disciplines:

- Law enforcement, Tribal and Non-Tribal
- Community Partners/Stakeholders
- Faith-Based Organizations

Any other participants who have direct oversight or involvement in law enforcement operations will also be included. Special attention will be placed on training those participants with limited access, including time and financial constraints to community policing training.

Cost: This no-cost training is provided by Western Community Policing Institute and U.S. Department of COPS Office.
